

Students who are or have experienced complications (permanent or temporary) related to pregnancy or childbirth may request reasonable accommodations. The non-exhaustive list below provides examples of accommodations that may be afforded to students depending on their unique situation. To ensure accommodations, students must register with Office of Services for Students with Disabilities \(OSSD\).

Accommodation Type	Examples of who may benefit	What it provides	How to enact it
Excused Absences	Those with morning sickness, complications, delivery, postpartum depression, etc.	Protects students from penalization for missing class because of pregnancy or pregnancy-related issues.	Students with this accommodation should communicate as soon as they know they will be absent and contact OSSD if absences are common.
Breaks	Those who have difficulty sitting or standing for long periods. Those who need to pump.	Time to step out of the class, lab, or site to meet one's needs.	Students will work with instructors to identify how to take a break in the least disruptive way.
Extended time on assignments	Those who are having difficulties during their pregnancy and those difficulties are impeding their ability to get school work done.	Extra time to complete an assignment.	Students will work with the Title IX Coordinator, OSSD, and their Faculty.
Food/Water in class	Those who need to eat or drink in a class where it is otherwise prohibited.	An opportunity to either eat/drink in class or step out to do so.	Students will work with instructors to identify how to utilize this accommodation in the safest and least disruptive way.
Chair/Table	Students who, due to their pregnancy, require a separated chair/desk space to provide adequate space for their abilities.	A movable chair separate from a desk.	Students can make a furniture request using this form .
Access to missed work, exams, lecture, etc.	Students who miss any of these due to their pregnancy, complications, or delivery.	Access to complete their course.	Students will work with the Title IX Coordinator, OSSD, and their Faculty.
Extra time on exams	Students who may have needs or demands from pregnancy that cause disruption for them during exams.	Extra time to accommodate the unexpected demands of pregnancy.	Students will work with the Title IX Coordinator, OSSD, and their Faculty.
