PREPARING FOR LIFE OFF CAMPUS

ESSENTIALS FOR SELF-ADVOCATING WHILE LIVING OFF CAMPUS
Reporting maintenance issues
Typically, there are no maintenance forms to fill out off campus, and instead, renters must contact their property owner directly when issues arise.

Who enforces the rules
Resident Assistants live in the residence halls and enforce rules 24/7. There are no RA’s for off-campus living, but there are police officers.

Reprimands for breaking the rules
WCU students are expected to uphold the Student Code of Conduct on and off-campus. Rules broken in the Borough result in a student conduct hearing in addition to any Borough reprimands.

Handling roommate conflict
Roommate conflicts on campus are frequently mediated by RA’s. When living off campus roommate conflicts can be mediated by an OCCS staff member.

Cleaning Schedules & Responsibilities
Communal areas in the residence halls, such as bathrooms and lounges, are cleaned by custodial staff. Living off campus requires students to create their own cleaning schedules.

Moving from on-campus living to off-campus living can be a difficult transition if the differences between the two are not understood. Below, are five differences WCU students should keep in mind as they move from on-campus housing to off-campus housing:

Reporting maintenance issues
- Typically, there are no maintenance forms to fill out off campus, and instead, renters must contact their property owner directly when issues arise.

Who enforces the rules
- Resident Assistants live in the residence halls and enforce rules 24/7. There are no RA’s for off-campus living, but there are police officers.

Self-advocacy best practices

Be Decisive
Decide on what you want, or don’t want, and be clear about it. Set your sights on a goal and get as close to it as possible.

Speak Up
If you have a question, ask it. If you want something changed, ask about it. Speaking up and asking about something never hurts and will always give you more information.

Educate Yourself
Familiarize yourself with the subject of your decision. The more knowledge you have on the subject you’re advocating for the better argument and counterargument you can present.

Believe in Yourself
You already know what you want and you’ve educated yourself, you can do this! When you believe in yourself you make others believe in you too. Confidence is hard to argue with.

Keep Cool, Calm & Collected
When you are advocating for yourself and others, try not to let your emotions rise. Nothing looks more professional confident than someone staying calm while someone else gets upset.

Document Everything
Documenting conversations in writing is the best way to reinforce your argument. Verbal conversations and agreements are easy to dismiss, but a paper trail with information and pictures is much harder to dismiss.

Roommate Agreement Form
Similar to the roommate agreement form that is recommended students fill out when living on campus, OCCS has created a roommate agreement specific to living in a shared house or apartment off campus.
