BRIEF SUMMARY OF PROPOSED PROGRAM

Minor in Science Education

A new "Science Education Minor" is being proposed that represents an interdisciplinary collaboration among the sciences, with the program being administered in the Department of Geology & Astronomy. The science education reform efforts of the late 1990's recognize the important role that elementary and middle schools play in the development of science literacy in the American society. In the "No Child Left Behind" federal legislation, accountability for science literacy was specifically recognized with required national testing for accountability by the 2007-2008 academic year. The Pennsylvania Department of Education is conducting the first implementation of the science Pennsylvania State Standard Assessment (PSSA).

Despite these national and state mandates, elementary teacher preparation at most universities, including WCU, still require minimal coursework to develop science understanding in future elementary teachers. For future elementary teachers with an interest in science, the programs currently available only develop future teacher training within a single field of science. The "Science Education Minor" will develop elementary teacher science literacy in the four disciplines of science (Biology, Chemistry, Earth & Space Science, and Physics), as well as interdisciplinary science courses to develop appreciation of the interdependence among the science disciplines. This curriculum will well prepare future teachers in the content domains included in the Praxis Middle School Science test, which will increase the employment prospects of candidates into the Middle School science classrooms. Candidates who complete this curriculum will also increase their elementary grade level employment prospects, since they will have the expertise to serve as science teaching mentors to other teachers in their elementary school buildings. We envision this minor will improve the science education of elementary and middle school students, as well as the science education of WCU students.
